O. E. S. FIELD DAY

The Annual Field Day and picnic of the Oxford County Association, O. E. S., was held at Lake View Cottage on the shore of South Pond, Aug. 11, 1921. Lake View Cottage is an ideal spot for a pleasant outing and the weather was fine.

The Cushman's hearty hospitality with the receiving representatives of Jefferson Chapter made everyone feel warmly welcome and at liberty to enjoy the grounds, the beach and the boating.

One hundred and twenty-five names were registered in the guest book of the cottage and eleven Chapters were represented with some out of State visitors.

At noon a picnic lunch was enjoyed with delicious coffee served by Jefferson Chapter.

After dinner a brief business meeting was held followed by a delightful program of musical and literary selections given by the talent of the different Chapters.

This year's Field Day was one of the most enjoyable and successful held in many years and well deserved credit is given Jefferson Chapter for the cordial entertainment.

DO YOUR HEADLIGHTS ON YOUR AUTO COMPLY WITH THE LAW?

No longer are motorists and pedestrians to be blinded by the glaring headlights of approaching automobiles in this State, for a corps of motor vehicle inspectors has been appointed by the Highway Commission.

It does not make any difference if your car is parked and it is broad daylight, it will be tagged if the inspector notices that your lenses are not of the lawful type, informing you that your attention is called to that fact and that the lenses must be replaced at once with those which do comply with the law.

The following list comprises all of the lenses approved for use in motor vehicle headlights on the highways of the State of Maine: Bosch Lom, Shaler Roadlighter, Full Ray, Fracto-Lites, Star Liffusing, Clamert, Type-A, Clamert, Type-B, Controllite, Conaphore, Dillon, Holophane, Legallite, Libbey, Macbeth, McKee, National, No-Glare, Osgood, Patterson Lenz, Raydex, Saferlite, Success Rib, Sunlight, Sun Ray, Violet Ray, Brown Reflector, Parab-O-Light Lenz, Benzor Lenz. A plain lens permanently sand blasted or frosted is legal.

A bulb of a greater capacity than 32 Candle Power must not be used under any circumstances.

The State Highway Commission is making a strenuous effort to improve the conditions as to head lights on motor vehicles and to this end it asks the cooperation of every motorist.

It is not sufficient that your car be equipped with one of the approved lenses, as above listed. Your lamps also must be adjusted and focused so that that projected ray 75 feet ahead of the light on a level way shall not be over 42 inches from the ground. The bulb must not be over 32 candle power or equivalent wattage. You can make the test yourself on the garage door or on the wall of some building. Please do it and if your lights do not meet the required test find out what the matter is and have the proper adjustment made.

It is not the intention of the commission to make any radical changes in the light regulations this season.

A motor vehicle with one of its lights on or with no tail light will not be tolerated on the highways at night.

According to advice received from Augusta, a rigid inspection is soon to be carried on in regard to the necessary changes and additions to motor trucks, as required in the new motor truck laws which went into effect July 5.

The requirements are that every truck shall have its weight (body and chassis) painted upon both sides of the body, in figures large enough to be easily read. They may be painted either upon the body itself or upon plates later attached to the body. Underneath this statement must also be the body capacity, also in large, plain figures. On the front mudguard on the driver's side must be attached a six inch mirror, so that the road in the rear is clearly visible to the operator.

The rules go on to state specific speed limits for trucks. Although speed of motor vehicles on the open highway is 25 miles per hour, there are certain restrictions in regard to heavy trucks, to protect the surface of the roads. Trucks of the weight of one ton to a ton and a half are restricted to a speed of not more than 20 miles per hour. Heavier trucks are limited to 15 miles per hour, while the extra large capacity trucks (weighing nine tons and more) are not to be allowed to travel faster than 2 miles.

Mr. and Mrs. Jameson Finney of Dixfield were recent callers in town.

I. P. CO. CLOSES RUMFORD PLANT FOR SIX MONTHS

The International mill situation has assumed a serious aspect so far as Rumford is concerned, notice being given that the Rumford mill will be closed for six months, most of the employees having been laid off, clerks have been let go, etc. It is understood that Mill Superintendent P. B. McCarthy has for the present been assigned to duty in one of their mills in Vermont. No effort whatever has been made, or will be made, as we understand, to start the Rumford mill at present. With construction work outside drawing to a close around town, the outlook for the fall and winter is far from encouraging.

NEW TEACHERS FOR GOULD'S ACADEMY

Principal F. E. Hanscom announces the following additions to the faculty for the ensuing year.

Mr. Louis E. Euvrard of North Adams, Mass., teacher of manual training and physical director for boys. Mr. Euvrard is a graduate of the manual training department of the Fitchburg Normal School, and for the past two years has taught in the manual training department of the Waltham, Mass., high school, which position he resigns to come to Gould's Academy.

During his high school and normal school courses Mr. Euvrard was prominent in all branches of athletics, having won his letters in base-ball, foot-ball, basketball and track. Two years ago he coached the winning basketball team of the Fitchburg Normal School and has himself played professional basketball in several Massachusetts cities. Mr. Euvrard comes highly recommended for the dual position which he is to fill at Gould's Academy.

Miss Beth B. Morris of Portland, a graduate of the Gorham Normal School will be assistant in mathematics and Physical Director for girls. Miss Morris has had six years successful experience, and comes highly recommended from Braintree, Mass., where she taught in the junior high school.

With these two additions to the strong corps of teachers which Gould's had last year, with new courses in manual and physical training added to the already strong curriculum, with new and renovated buildings to meet all present needs, Gould's Academy should, on Sept. 13, enter upon the best year in her long and honorable history.

Principal Hanscom reports the prospect of a very large entering class, the advance registration being the largest since he became connected with the school.

FARM BUREAU NEWS

The Farm Bureau committee men of Bethel, Paris, Buckfield, Hebron, and Lovell have held meetings during the past two weeks to summarize the work done for the present year and to make extensive plans for a program of work for next year. Many factors affecting the profits of farmers were analyzed and suggestions made as to how the various problems might be remedied.

Although Norway has not yet a Farm Bureau organization, a group of farmers with the county agent to consider the benefits which might be derived through the Farm Bureau work. After a thorough discussion those present decided that the town should have the Farm Bureau organization because it could materially aid in solving the many farm problems affecting the community.

The programs of work decided upon by the various towns include farm accounts, cow test associations and circles, silage and oat demonstrations, orchard spraying, pruning, fertilization and community planting, poultry culling and early hatching demonstrations, boys' and girls' club work, as well as other features. Many believed that insufficient clover was being produced and decided that one of the limiting factors was cost of seed, which might be remedied by raising more home-grown feed, such as silage corn and clover.

Committee meetings will be held in all other organized towns in the county during the present month, the schedule being as follows: Rumford and Dixfield, Aug. 23; Canton and Sumner, Aug. 24; Waterford, Aug. 25; Brownfield and Fryeburg, Aug. 30; Denmark, Aug. 31.

PAYING THE FIDDLER

A lot of people think the war is over—but Secretary of the Treasury Mellon knows better. As the principal bookkeeper of the United States Government Mr. Mellon has insisted that figures don't lie, and his figures show that nearer five billion than four billion dollars are necessary to carry on this year's expenses of the Government.

President Harding has effected a compromise measure by which Congress will reduce the Government tax bill to $4,034,000,000, and this lops off $600,000,000 from the estimates furnished by the Treasury. Last year the appropriations made by Congress aggregated $4,850,000,000.

We believe that it was former Speaker Reed who replied to the protest against "a billion dollar Congress" that "this is a billion dollar country."

And Reed has only been dead nineteen years! The Treasury of the United States paid one billion dollars in interest last year, and pretty close to five billion dollars for all other purposes.

Counting the floating debt there are about seven and a quarter billions of treasury certificates, Victory bonds, war savings stamps, and other securities falling due within the next two years. It does not take much of a mathematician to figure out that the United States Government will have to raise more than $17,000,000,000 within two years. The war was the biggest, merriest dance in all history, and now we are paying the fiddler.

THE CERTAINTY OF DEATH AND TAXES

It is becoming out of date of "blame the Democrats" for high taxes, and the popular political recreation is to shift the great burden of taxes; and in doing this the politicians keep constantly in mind the need of tactics that will affect the least number of votes. The situation is the same today as it was when Ben Franklin wrote: "Our Constitution is in actual operation; everything appears to promise that it will last; but in this world nothing is certain but death and taxes." President Harding is determined to save the last dollar possible from current expenses and apply it to the maturing debts, and in carrying out this policy he took his political future in his hands in deferring the soldiers' bonus bill. No one well informed now expects to see this legislation enacted. The Budget system, under the direction of General Dawes, is a further effort to make more effective the national pruning knife. Three hundred and fifty million dollars has been chopped from the estimates for running the Agriculture, War and Navy Departments, the Shipping Board, Railroads, and from the general accounts of the Government. This all looks like constructive work, and it will help to lower the burden a little. But a few million dollars saved can not alter the fact that taxes must be imposed to pay for the wastage of the war. "Billions" are a condition—and it takes something more than a political platform of promised economy, or a subsequent "resolution" to get away from obligations such as our National Government must meet. Of course we have ten billions due us from Europe, but Europe seems perfectly able to owe us, and not to be worried about returning either the interest or the principal.

SOAKING THE CORPORATIONS

The tax on the net income of corporations is increased from ten to twelve and a half per cent by the new tax bill. Soft drinks and so-called "nuisance taxes," which have been distributed over numerous articles, and have been a tax burden among people who otherwise would not pay a dollar to the direct support of the public treasury, are to be abolished by the new tax scheme. The bill will repeal the excess profits taxes of January 1, 1921; reduce the income surtaxes to 40 per cent as of January 1, 1921, and to 33 per cent to take effect January 1, 1922. There will be no new taxes except the additional load that will be put on the corporations and an adjustment of several miscellaneous items. Owing to the business shrinkage it is hardly probable that the aggregate amount of taxes from corporations will be as much as last year.

During the first three months of this year there were 4,370 business failures with liabilities of $178,880,889 in the country. For the subsequent three months ending June 30 there was an improvement, and the number of failures was 4,133, with liabilities of $187,621,532.

Uncle Walt's Story

HARD ON THE POETS

"I'M SCHEDULED to recite 'Annabel Lee' at an entertainment to-night," confessed the retired merchant. "I've been repeating the poem to myself almost constantly for several days, and know every comma in it, but I'm afraid that when I stand up to recite, I'll have forgotten every word of it."

"I hope so," said the hotelkeeper. "Such a poem as 'Annabel Lee' deserves better treatment than you are qualified to give it. You have a voice like a guinea hen, and you telescope your words, and you don't know any more about poetry than a porcupine knows about Paradise. If you'd stand up and recite a few pages from a mail-order catalogue I have no doubt you'd put the proper feeling into it, and move your audience to tears, but it's a crime for a man like you to mangle a beautiful poem, full of sentiment and melody. 'There ought to be a law against that sort of thing. Some of the best poems in the country have been ruined by common or garden elocutionists. Nowadays people smile when you mention 'Curfew Must Not Ring Tonight.' It has been recited so much by people with cracked voices that it has become a joke. Yet if you examine the poem calmly and impartially you will find that it has a great deal of merit."

"In the schools the pupils are permitted to recite some of our best poems, and the poems aren't fit for anything after it. The school authorities should prohibit this sort of thing, and prepare a volume of cheap asbestos poetry that is fool proof, that can't be injured, no matter what you do to it. There is plenty of punk poetry in the world, and a collection of this stuff would serve the schoolboy elocutionists just as well as the high class poetry that is so easily spoiled."

"When I went to school, about a hundred years ago, there was a tall, freckled, gangling boy, who talked through his nose, with a sort of whine that sounded like filing a saw. There was to be a school entertainment, and this boy was down for a recitation. The teacher never asked him what he was going to recite, but gave him the right of way. Teachers continue to make the same mistake, even as we go to press. They should choose the poems which are to be butchered to make a Roman holiday and select something that won't rip, ravel or run down at the heel."

"This boy stood up before the school and droned through Gray's 'Elegy.' Now, that's one of the best rhymes ever composed. It was written by a journeyman poet who put in seven years at it. In the time when they had ten-hour days. He wanted to leave behind him a poem that would stand the severest tests of the government inspectors, and he did. In my opinion there is nothing better in any language. It is rather melancholy, but it has a sort of doggone soothing quality that is a balm to the bruised spirit of a landlord when he finds that the receipts of his hotel don't equal the expenses."

"Time and again, when discouraged and played out, I have started to read that poem, and as soon as I get fairly into it, I seem to see that blamed gangling schoolboy, in his high-water garments, and hear him droning through those verses, making a noise like a sawmill on a wet day. It's more than forty years since he made a violent assault upon the Elegy, but it seems like yesterday. It's the same way with Hamlet's 'Soliloquy.' Every time I hear or see that gem I think of a fat youth who recited it in our school, and then I burst into tears. 'There's no sense in such a business, and congress ought to do something, doggone it.'"

WILLIAM TELL FLOUR

One or two scourings might do for an ordinary flour, but William Tell is not an ordinary flour. So we scour our wheat six times, one after another, until we know that it is perfectly clean.

We then take off the outside hull, and use only the fine rich inside portion of the grain.

Considering the way it's made, it's not surprising that William Tell is so clean and pure and fine.

Your grocer knows. Tell him—William Tell.

the business depression that "the improvement in the last three months indicates that the heaviest part of the unpleasant task of killing off the concerns too weak to survive has been done; but these figures do not tell the whole story, for the number and importance of the failures would have been greater if a new method had not been developed for taking care of many ailing business situations." Leading business men and bankers are agreed that the country has been going through every stage of a panic, less the actual panic, because of the Federal Reserve banking system which has been able to produce elastic currency—literally chasing money around to places where it has been most needed. The strain on business has been terrific; but this is "reconstruction," or "readjustment," and there are pretty good evidences that the worst is over. Hundreds of industries are already showing new life, because the shelves of the country are like the family pantry that has to be replenished when it has been empty a long time. Statements of bank clearings show the greatest depression to have been in the farming communities west of the Mississippi River, in the South, and in New England.

FORD APPARENTLY LOOKING FOR BARGAIN

All evidence of the "philanthropist" appear to be missing in the negotiations being carried on by Henry Ford to purchase the big Government war plant at Muscle Shoals. Mr. Ford seems perfectly willing to take over the plant at considerably less than it would bring in the "junk" market. The Secretary of War is anxious to relieve the Government from the necessity of "Government operation" at Muscle Shoals, as he is in agreement with the balance of the Administration, that there has been a surplus of that sort of thing growing out of the war. Nevertheless Secretary Weeks feels that the Ford offer borders on the verge of being ridiculous.

THE MICHIGAN SENATORSHIP
The Republican Senators have decided to give Senator Newberry of Michigan a clean bill of health, and despite the fact that he was at one time found guilty of corruption in securing his election, the Senate will take the reversal of the decision of the lower Court as an exoneration for the Michigan man. In the hearings before the Senate investigating committee it has been made clear that Mr. Newberry had plenty of votes to constitute a clear lead over Henry Ford, and all the talk of his "technical guilt" has resolved itself down to a conviction that Senator Newberry and his friends, after all, "played the game quite as most others have played it." So Senator Newberry looks good to his colleagues peering through their tortoise-shell spectacles.

LAYING ON THE IRON HAND
The grain trading exchanges and the packers are to be "regulated," pursuant to the new laws of the Government. Thus the "iron hand" of restraint will be laid on these industries by Uncle Sam. The industries are not likely to suffer much from the new restrictions, as it has been pretty well established that in the matter of regulation the Government can ill afford to exercise undue restraint upon people engaged in any field of industry. The "new idea" is to supervise the carrying out of certain policies, which usually are unobjectionable to those engaged in honest enterprises.

THE OXFORD COUNTY CITIZEN, $2.00 A YEAR

Portugal's Story

View of Lisbon Harbor.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

Portugal, one of the least known and least written about countries of Europe, owes this fact, in part at least, to its language. In spite of the claim made by some Portuguese that their speech is closer to the pure Latin than that of any of the other Romance peoples, students find that many Gothic, Arabic, and even Berber elements have strikingly altered the Latin foundation, making the language unusually difficult for those accustomed to the commoner European tongues.

But Portuguese is predominantly a Romance language, and Roman customs and practices have been just as tenacious in Portugal as the Roman tongue. Agriculture has hardly changed at all since the days when, under the protection of Roman legions, settlers came from Italy to the charming valleys of Portugal and introduced their methods of tilling the soil. The addition of maize to the crops grown is perhaps the one significant change since those days. Oxen are still used by the farmers as in old days, and they drag, not a modern implement of tillage, but the old primitive Roman plow consisting of crooked stick shod with iron and having a single handle. Grapes are trained upon trees as the Romans trained them, and wine is made in the peculiar way in which it was made on the Sabine farms of old Italy before the beginning of the Christian era.

Not Much Like Spain. What is now the republic, but was for centuries the kingdom of Portugal, covers the greater part of the old province of Lusitania, one of the rich but hardly won units of the Roman empire. Because of general lack of knowledge in regard to Portugal, there has been a tendency to look on the country as a sort of poor imitation of Spain. Geographically, there is little in common between these two countries which together cover the Iberian peninsula. Much of Spain is a dry, barren tableland; but Portugal, sloping westward to the Atlantic from the east, is well watered, and many of its hills are covered with luxuriant forest growth.

The Romans recognized Lusitania to be fertile and desirable, and colonized it eagerly after the natives were subjugated. After the fall of the Roman empire, Portugal was overrun by the Visigoths from the north and later still by the Moors from the south. The results of the mingling of the blood of these two peoples with that of the inhabitants whom they found in Portugal is evident in the Portuguese of today.

The Tagus river, at the south of which is the beautiful capital and metropolis of the country, Lisbon, forms both an ethnic and economic dividing line. In the region to the north of the Tagus, comprising about three-fifths of the area of the country, are the more typical Portuguese. They are the Celtic, Gothic and Latin mixture with little or none of the Moorish or African strain. This northern region is a country of small farms largely cultivated by the proprietors and their families. The diffusion of the land among many independent owners has created a sturdy yeomanry which has been the backbone of Portuguese nationality. The people are intensely patriotic and have ever been ready to fight against foreign domination.

Famous for Its Wines. Much of Portugal is hilly, and the little farms of the region north of the Tagus consist of a series of terraces. Near the northern boundary of the country in the valley of the Douro river and its tributaries is the most famous wine country of Portugal. It is estimated that in favorable years more than 20 gallons of wine are produced annually in Portugal for each man, woman and child in the country. Port and Madeira are the best known of the vintages. They are shipped through Oporto in great quantities, going chiefly to Great Britain and Brazil, but in less quantities to many other markets. Nearly two gallons of olive oil per inhabitant are produced each year. Portugal's cork forests are one of the chief sources of wealth for the country. From them comes nearly one-half of the cork produced in the world. The United States imports from Portugal about three-fourths of the cork which it uses.

South of the Tagus river the long occupation of the country by the Moors is evident not only through the architecture, but also because of the appearance of the people. Almost pure Berber types are met in many parts of the district.

Its Rise as a Kingdom.

There was really no Portugal during Roman, Germanic and Moorish domination. Portugal may be considered to have begun to emerge for the first time in 1065 when the Spanish crown, having conquered a small part of the northern portion of the present Portugal, made it an hereditary countyship. The rise of Portugal from this small beginning to an important kingdom and then an empire constitutes perhaps the most spectacular development of a nation to be found in modern history. The son of the first count, Alfonso I Henriquez, made his country independent of Spain and himself its king. He then began what was practically a crusade against the Moors to the south, and with the assistance of Christian knights from other countries of Europe, succeeded in driving the infidels from Lisbon in 1147. He and his successors continued the fight, and by about the hundredth anniversary of the fall of Lisbon the entire area of the present Portugal had been freed of Moorish dominion. The country continued to grow in importance, wealth and power. Prince Henry the Navigator became the patron of navigation early in the fifteenth century, and under his encouragement Portugal's great page of discovery and colonization began to be written. The Portuguese were the first of the Europeans to have the necessary vision to make an ordered search for the hidden places of the earth; and their sailors were the first to establish contact between Europe and a large part of the then unknown world, both east and west.

But if the rise of Portugal was rapid, its fall from great power and wealth was equally swift. Its man power was severely drained to take care of its extensive possessions and its even broader spheres of influence. Even then colonial affairs were managed rather poorly and there came the inevitable reaction. Weak kings at home with spendthrift proclivities combined to undermine Portugal's rapidly built overseas empire; and the competition of other nations which went about the building of empires more methodically was no unimportant factor in the displacing of Portugal from the foremost position in world affairs which she had won so quickly and with such seeming ease.

Even though shorn of many of its former possessions, Portugal still controls more than 800,000 square miles of colonial dependencies, chiefly in Africa. The possession of this extensive territory makes Portugal the fourth colonial power of the world, if Russia be disregarded.

JUST GOT OVER A COLD?

Look out for kidney troubles and backache. Colds overtax the kidneys and often leave them weak. For weak kidneys—well, read what a Bethel man says:

F. M. Wood, 4 Park St., says: "My kidneys began to annoy me some years ago after I had strained my back lifting. After this my back ached pretty badly and I was in bad shape for a long time. When I took cold, my kidneys got congested and at times they acted irregularly. After Doan's Kidney Pills were recommended, I began to use them and they took hold of trouble quickly. I soon had relief from the backache and the action of my kidneys was corrected. Now, I use Doan's Kidney Pills as needed and am always benefited. I always keep the remedy on hand, getting my supply from Bosserman's Drug Store." (Statement given June 8, 1916.)

On September 9, 1920, Mr. Wood said: "During the past four years, Doan's Kidney Pills have done fine work whenever I have used them for any sign of kidney weakness. I think just as highly of Doan's today as when I first endorsed them." Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.

Studying Smoke. Smoke is perhaps the chief enemy of firefighters. It chokes and may kill. The United States bureau of standards has now built what it calls a "smoke house" for experiments which are expected to be of practical usefulness to the fire departments of our cities. It will be used to determine exactly what is required to make "smoke masks" a safe and sure protection for men engaged in subduing fires.

CELEBRATES SEVENTIETH ANNIVERSARY

This month, the well-known and respected firm, Dr. J. F. True & Co., of Auburn, Maine will celebrate their seventieth anniversary.

Years and years ago, back in the time when automobiles were unheard of, this was in 1851, Dr. True went the rounds of the pioneer general stores and also the very homesteads, dispensing supplies of Dr. True's Elixir, the Family Laxative and Worm Expeller.

This remedy proved an instant success, so much so in fact, that the elderly Dr. True soon found it almost impossible to compound enough for all his customers.

Minute care made it necessary for Dr. True to prepare his Dr. True's Elixir slowly. Pure herbs and seeds were essential; the best and purest on the market were sought, and today, that proud distinction of making Dr. True's Elixir exact in every unit has furthered its reputation; gained for it unlimited praise, and has placed it foremost among known laxatives which really are boon companions to the sick. Dr. True's Elixir is internationally known. It is sold over the entire world, but of course is better known and used to greater extent in the United States, especially New England and New York; also in Canada.

No family medicine chest seems complete without a bottle of Dr. True's Elixir. The children really enjoy taking their doses of this laxative. Many cases have shown the results obtained through use of Dr. True's Elixir, and one reads daily in the papers, some of the testimonials.

It is in the newspapers that Dr. J. F. True & Co. print their "ads" telling all readers about Dr. True's Elixir. This year is their seventieth successful one, and they are glad to be still serving the American public faithfully with a faithful remedy.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Graham Norcross, railroad manager, and his secretary, Sheila Macrae, are married at Sand Creek, Maine, and a young lady, Sheila Macrae, and her cousin, Danton, are with her. A special car is carried off.

CHAPTER II.—Norcross recognizes the car station as John Chadwick's, a scandalous man, whom he was to meet at Portland City. He and Danton, the manager of the Pioneer Short Line, which is in the hands of Chadwick, are in the car. Chadwick is a man of the name of the line. Norcross, learning that Sheila Macrae is stopping at Portland City, accepts.

CHAPTER III.—Dodd's overheard conversation between Norcross and Chadwick. He and Chadwick, who are in the car, are in the car. Chadwick is a man of the name of the line. Norcross, learning that Sheila Macrae is stopping at Portland City, accepts.

CHAPTER IV.—To curb the monopoly controlled by Hatch and Handel, the Red Tower corporation, Norcross forms the Citizens Storage Warehouse company. He begins to manifest a deep interest in Sheila Macrae. Dodd learns that Sheila is married, but living apart from her husband. Norcross does not know this.

CHAPTER V.—Hatch, aware that Dodd has knowledge of his and Handel's participation in the Chadwick kidnapping, offers him inducements to leave Norcross. Dodd refuses. Leaving the office, he is knocked senseless. Recovering consciousness, he learns that Norcross has disappeared and is believed to have resigned and gone east.

CHAPTER VI.—Dodd connects Norcross' disappearance with machinations of Hatch and Handel, and on recovering strength sets out to solve the mystery.

CHAPTER VII.—With Kirgan, the road's motor mechanic, Dodd gets a line on Norcross' disappearance. They follow a clue given them through a mining locomotive.

CHAPTER VIII.—The rescue party finds and releases Norcross from captivity to which he had been lured. Norcross resumes control of the Pioneer Short Line, refusing to give place to man whom Danton has sent to take charge.

CHAPTER IX.—Dodd follows an emissary of the Red Tower people, spying on Norcross, to a coal yard, where he oversees a plot to put Norcross out of business, and at the risk of his life frustrates it.

CHAPTER X.—At the home of Sheila Macrae Dodd is witness of strange scenes which he believes has designs on the life of his friend and boss. He prepares to defend him.

For the first time in all the weeks and months I'd been knowing him, the boss dodged; dodged just like any of us might.

"I've been talking to Major Kendrick," he said. "He is a wise old man. I don't, and he hears a good many things that don't get printed in the newspapers."

I could see that this excuse didn't fool Mr. Van Britton for a single instant, and there was a look in his eye that I couldn't quite understand. Neither could I make much out of what he said.

"We'll go into that a little deeper some day, Graham—after this epileptic attack has been fought off. This idea—which you confess isn't your own—is a pretty shrewd one, and I shouldn't wonder if it would work, if we can get it in motion before the hoodoo breaks us wide open. And, as you say, the accusation is justifiable, even if we can't prove up against the Hatch outfit. That turned-over rail in Ferracute Canyon, for example, might have been helped along by."

It was Kelo, Mr. Van Britton's stenographer, smashed in with the interjection. He was in his shirt-sleeves, as if he'd just got up from his typewriter, and he rushed in with his mouth open and his eyes like saucers. "They—they want you in the dispatcher's office!" he panted, jerking the words out at Mr. Van Britton. "Durgin has let Number Five get by for a head-on with the 'Flyer,' and he's gone crazy!"

CHAPTER XII

The Helpless Wires

When Bobby Kelo shot his news at us we all made a quick break for the dispatcher's office, the boss in the lead. Durgin, the night dispatcher, had been alone on the train desk, and the only other operators on duty were the car-record man and the young fellow who acted as a relief on the commercial wire. When we got there, we found that Tarbell had happened to be in the office when Durgin blew up. He was sitting in at the train key, trying to get Crow Gulch, the car intermediate wire station between the two trains that had failed to get their "meet" orders, and this was the first I knew that he really was the expert telegraph operator that his pay-roll description said he was.

Durgin looked like a tortured ghost. He was a thin, dark man with a sort of scattering beard and iron-black hair; one of the clearest-headed dispatchers in the bunch, and the very last man, you'd say, to get rattled in a tangle-up. Yet here he was, hunched in a chair at the car-record table, in the corner, a staring-eyed, pallid-faced wreck, with the sweat standing in big drops on his forehead and his hands shaking as if he had the palsy. Morris, the relief man, gave us the particulars, such as they were, speaking in a hushed voice as if he was afraid of breaking in on Tarbell's steady rattling of the key in the Crow Gulch station call.

"Number Four"—Four was the east-bound "Flyer"—"is five hours off her time," he explained. "As near as I can get it, Durgin was going to make her 'meet' with Number Five at the blind siding at Sand Creek tank. She ought to have had her orders somewhere west of Bauxite Junction, and Five ought to have got hers at Banta. Durgin says he simply forgot that the 'Flyer' was running late; that she was still out and had a 'meet' to make somewhere with Five."

Brief as Morris' explanation was, it was clear enough for anybody who knew the road and the schedules. The regular meeting-point for the two passenger trains was at a point well east of Portland City. Instead of west, and so, of course, would not concern the Desert Division crew of either train, since all crews were changed at Portland City. From Banta to Bauxite Junction, some thirty-odd miles, there was only one telegraph station, namely, that at the Crow Gulch lumber camp, seven miles beyond the Timber Mountain "Y" and the gravel pit where the stolen 1016 had been abandoned.

Unluckily, Crow Gulch was only a day station, the day wires being handled by a young man who was half in the pay of the railroad and half in that of the sawmill company. This young man slept at the mill camp, which was a mile back in the gulch. There was only one chance in a thousand that he would be down at the railroad station at ten o'clock at night, and it was on that thousandth chance that Tarbell was rattling the Crow Gulch call. If Five were making her card time, she was now about half-way between Timber Mountain "X" and Crow Gulch. And Four, the "Flyer," had just left Bauxite—with no orders whatever. Which meant that the two trains would come together somewhere near Sand Creek.

Mr. Van Britton was as good a wire man as anybody on the line, but it was the boss who took things in hand. "There is a long-distance telephone to the Crow Gulch saw-mill; have you tried that?" he barked at Tarbell.

The big young fellow who looked like a cowboy—and had really been one, they said—plunged up and nodded: "The call's in," he responded. "Central says she can't raise anybody."

For the next three or four minutes the tension was something fierce. The boss and Mr. Van Britton hung over the train desk, and Tarbell kept up his insistent clatter at the key. I had an eye on Durgin. He was still hunched up in the record-man's chair, and to all appearances had gone stone-blind.

"I Couldn't Get Rid of the Idea That He Was Listening."

crazy. Yet I couldn't get rid of the idea that he was listening—listening as if all of his sealed-up senses had turned in to intensify the one of hearing.

Just about the time when the suspense had grown so keen that it seemed as if it couldn't be borne a second longer, Morris, who was sitting in at the office phone, called out sharply: "Long-distance says she's Crow Gulch lumber camp!"

Mr. Van Britton jumped to take the phone, and we got one side of the talk—our side—in shot-like sentences: "That you, Bertram? All right; this is Van Britton at Portland City. Take one of the mules and ride for your life down the gulch to the station; get back on the line as fast as you can. Stop Number Five and make her take siding quick. Report over your own wire what you do. Hurry!"

By the time Mr. Van Britton got back to the train desk, the boss had his pencil out and was figuring on Bertram's time margin. It was now twelve, and Five's time at Crow Gulch was ten-thirteen. The Crow Gulch operator had just six minutes in which to get his mule and cover the rough mile down the gulch.

There was nothing to do but wait, and the waiting was savage. Tarbell had a nerve of iron, but I could see his hand shake as it lay on the glass-topped table. The boss was cool enough outwardly, but I knew that in his brain there was a heart-breaking picture of those two fast passenger trains rushing together in the night among the hills with no hint of warning to help them save themselves. Mr.

Van Britton couldn't keep still. He had his hands jammed in the side pockets of his coat and was pacing back and forth in the little space between the train desk and the counter railing.

At the different tables in the room the sounders were clicking away as if nothing were happening or due to happen, and above the spattering din and clatter you could hear the escape-ment of the big standard-time clock on the wall, hammering out the seconds that might mean life or death to two or three hundred innocent people.

In horrible suspense the six minutes pulled themselves out to an eternity for that little bunch of us in the dispatcher's office who could do nothing but wait. On the stroke of ten-thirteen, the time when Five was due at Crow Gulch on her schedule, Tarbell tuned his relay to catch the first faint tapping from the distant day-station. Another sounder was silent. There was hope in the delay, and Morris voiced it.

"He's there, and he's too busy to talk to us," he suggested, in a hushed voice; and Disbrow, the car-record man, added: "That's it; it'd take a minute or two to get them in on the siding."

The second minute passed, and then a third, and yet there was no word from Bertram. "Call him," snapped the boss to Tarbell, but before the ex-cow-boy's hand could reach the key, the sounder began to rattle out a string of dots and dashes; ragged Morse it was, but we could all read it only too plainly.

"Too late—mule threw me and I had to crawl and drag a game leg—Five passed full speed at ten-thirteen—I couldn't make it!"

I saw the boss' hands shut up as though the finger nails would cut into the palms.

"That ends it," he said, with a sort of swearing groan in his voice; and then to Tarbell: "You may as well call Kirgan and tell him to order out the wrecking train. Then have Perkins make up a relief train while you're calling the doctors. Van Britton, you go and notify the hospital over your own office wire. Have my private car put into the relief, and see to it that it has all the necessary supplies. And you'd better notify the undertakers, too."

Great Jow! but it was horrible—for us to be hustling around and making arrangements for the funeral while the people who were to be gathered up and buried were still swinging along live and well, half of them in the crookings among the Timber Mountain foothills and the other half somewhere in the desert stretches below Sand Creek!

Tarbell had sent Disbrow to the phone to call Kirgan, and Mr. Van Britton was turning away to go to his own office, when the chair in the corner by the car-record table fell over backwards with a crash and Durgin came staggering across the room. He was staring straight ahead of him as if he had gone blind, and the sweat was running down his face to lose itself in the straggling beard.

When he spoke his voice seemed to come from away off somewhere, and he was still staring at the blank wall beyond the counter-railing.

"Did I—did I hear somebody say you're sending for the undertakers?" he asked, with a dry rattle in his throat; and then, without waiting for an answer: "While you're at it, you'd better get one for me... there's the money to pay him, and he tossed a thick roll of bank bills, wrapped around with a rubber band, over to Tarbell at the train desk.

Naturally, the little grand-stand play with the bank roll made a diversion, and that is why the muffled crash of a pistol shot came with a startling shock to everybody. When we turned to look, the mischief was done. Durgin had crumpled down into a misshapen heap on the floor and the sight we saw was enough to make your blood run cold.

You see, he had put the muzzle of the pistol into his mouth, and—but it's no use; I can't tell about it, and the very thought of that thing that had just a minute before been a man, lying there on the floor makes me see black and want to keel over. What he had said about sending for an extra undertaker was right as right. With the top of his head blown off, the poor devil didn't need anything more in this world except the burying.

Somebody has said, mildly truthfully, that even a death in the family doesn't stop the common routine; that the things that have to be done will go grinding on, just the same, whether all of us live, or some of us die. Disbrow had jumped from the telephone at the crash of Durgin's shot, and for just a second or so we all stood around the dead dispatcher, nobody making a move.

Then Mr. Norcross came alive with a jerk, telling Disbrow to get back on his job of calling out the wreck wagons and the relief train, and directing Bobby Kelo to go to another phone and call an undertaker to come and get Durgin's body. Tarbell turned back to the train desk to keep things from getting into a worse tangle than they already were in, and to wait for the dreadful news, and the boss stood by him.

This second wait promised to be the worst of all. The collision was due to happen miles from the nearest wire station; the news, when we should get it, would probably be carried back to Bauxite Junction by the pusher engine which had gone out to try to overtake the "Flyer." But even in that case it might be an agonizing hour or more before we could hear anything.

BOY SCOUTS

(Conducted by National Council of the Boy Scouts of America.)

FIRST TO WIN GOLD MEDAL

Dale Collier of Rock Island, Ill., has the honor of being the first scout to win the new gold medal just designed for the Court of Honor, by Belmont Brown, the explorer. The incident which won the coveted National Scout Medal of Honor for young Collier occurred last January.

The boy had just started on an errand for his mother when he noticed three men walking on the ice on the river. Even as he saw them he perceived to his horror that the ice was breaking beneath them. He ran about 300 yards and found an old boat.

There were no oars but he snatched up a piece of board and jumping into the boat broke his way through to where one of the men was sinking. The boy threw him the board and pulled the boat fast filling with water, close to the man, got him into it and back to shore. Then emptying out the boat he set out again in search of the others. This time, not having even the board to help him, he beat his way through the ice downstream with his fists. By this arduous process he finally got to where the other two men were. He managed with much difficulty to get both into the boat, which then began to sink from the weight and having shipped so much water. The men being unconscious, the boy bailed for dear life with his hands, screaming for help. Another boat reached them in time and all were gotten ashore. Not content with his already heroic achievement young Collier worked over the unconscious men trying to induce artificial respiration. He succeeded in the case of one man but the other who was just recovering from an illness never regained consciousness. The story is one of the most striking of the many noteworthy instances of scout pluck and resourcefulness that have passed through the hands of the Court of Honor and Scout Collier well deserves the honor accorded him.

SCOUTS ON THE JOB.

Out in Bellingham, Wash., some spectators chuckled with approval over the following incident and reported it to the local papers: A quart bottle of milk had been dropped in the street and lay splintered into a thousand pieces prepared to do their worst to all passing feet. Two lads in khaki "happened along." Instantly their sharp eyes took in the situation. "Boy Scout Safety!" they shouted in unison and swooped down upon the broken bits of glass, which in another moment were gathered up and deposited in the proper receptacle. An excellent object lesson this, to all who witnessed the incident and another proof that scouting is doing just what it claims to do—makes responsible citizens.

A small boy pushed accidentally to the ground in a school yard recently suffered a broken leg. Instantly there were boy scouts at hand to take charge.

A Q. A. R. VERDICT.

A Q. A. R. veteran of Columbus, Ohio, says: "While attending our Grand army encampments for the past few years I have come to the conclusion we could not get along without the boy scout's ever-ready help. They are the first persons we meet when we get off the train, to carry our luggage to our stopping place, and if we have no place engaged they will take us to one and see that we are made comfortable. They can beat the police at their own game when it comes to watching a street crossing or keeping the streets clear for parade. They are always on hand with a cool cup of water; in fact, everywhere to do a good deed for somebody. I have learned to love them. I consider the boy scout movements one of the best schools of American education. I say God bless them and the men who contribute their time and money to boost them. Boys, the Grand Army of the Republic are your friends."

SCOUTS DO EMERGENCY WORK.

Boy scouts did noteworthy work after the tornado disaster in the South last spring, working tirelessly for many hours, rendering first aid, searching for the dead, and removing the wreckage. Local papers at the time expressed the greatest admiration for the pluck, energy and endurance of these young citizens pledged to service of others at all times and under all conditions.

VETERAN CORPS ORGANIZED.

Veteran scout associations made up of men who have served at least five years in the movement are now being organized throughout the country. Philadelphia, Baltimore and Chicago have respectively the honor of establishing the first, second and third Veteran Scout corps. Over 130 men have registered already as ten-year service men and hundreds more are eligible here is a roll of honor of which the movement may be justly proud.

The AMERICAN LEGION

(Copy for This Department Supplied by the American Legion News Service.)

ACTOR BECOMES LEGION MAN

Frank Tinney, Member of New York City, Post Lines Up Many of His Buddies.

The man with the smile is Frank Tinney. Broadway theatre-goers are familiar with the Tinney expanse of countenance and so are various former members of the army and navy, with both of which branches Tinney served in the late lamented guerre. Tinney is herewith snapped in the very act of joining the American Legion, F. W. Galbraith Jr. post, New York City. O. R. Baines, general manager of the American Legion Weekly fastened the button in Tinney's coat.

The actor's war record is an unusual one. He enlisted soon after the outbreak of hostilities in the navy as seaman, third class. After a hitch in the army passport transport service, he was promoted to ensign and then to lieutenant, junior grade. After eleven months in the navy he was transferred by executive order to the army as captain in the intelligence service and assigned as morale officer to various camps in this country. He was discharged three months after the armistice, with commendations from the chief of the Intelligence Bureau and from the White House.

Tinney has vigorously subscribed to the Legion motto: "Every member get a member" and has rounded up various members of the actors' colony who are eligible to Legion membership.

LEGION MAN LOST NO TIME

North Carolina Lieutenant Rose From Farmer Boy to Numerous Ranks During War.

From farmer boy to high school teacher and later a lawyer and from buck private to first lieutenant are the records of Cole K. Burgess, the first department commander of the American Legion in North Carolina, who was the pioneer Legionnaire in his state. Burgess is adjutant and finance officer of the North Carolina department. Born July 15, 1891, at Old Trap, Camden County, N. C., Burgess was reared on a farm. He received his early education at the village public school and later was graduated from Whitsett Institute, from which he entered the University of North Carolina. He received his bachelor of arts degree in 1912 and taught science in the public high school at Raleigh two years, studying law at the same time. In September, 1913, he was granted a license to practice law in North Carolina and pursued the practice of his profession until July, 1917, when he enlisted as a private in the First N. C. F. A. N. G., which regiment was soon afterward mustered into Federal service as the 131st F. A., 20th Division.

During the St. Mihiel offensive he served as artillery liaison officer. In the Argonne offensive and until after the signing of the armistice he served as regimental intelligence officer. He was in service eighteen months and served as private, corporal, sergeant, battalion sergeant-major, regimental sergeant-major, second lieutenant and first lieutenant. With the latter rank he served as adjutant of his regiment during the last months of his service.

No Trespassers Allowed.

One of the wings of the plane had broken, and its pilot, after crashing through a mass of planking and plaster, found himself resting on a concrete surface in utter darkness. "Where am I?" he asked feebly. "You're in my cellar," came an ominous voice out of the blackness. "But I'm watching you."—American Legion Weekly.

RAPID RISE FOR LEGION MAN

Colonel Shaughnessy's Career Has Been on the Upgrade Since He Was a Boy.

When he was in the army, Colonel Edward H. Shaughnessy's career was on the upgrade. Now that he has returned to civil life and joined the American Legion in New York City, he has voluntarily demoted himself from a $25,000 job to one which pays $5,000 a year.

Colonel Shaughnessy was induced by Postmaster General Will Hays to sacrifice his position as assistant director of the American Petroleum Institute, New York City, to become second assistant postmaster general.

"I understand you've taken a $5,000 a year job," said a correspondent who interviewed him.

"Does it pay that?" he asked. "I'd forgotten to ask about the salary."

The salary is a minor consideration now, but it would have been different in the days when Colonel Shaughnessy worked as a messenger boy in Chicago. When he was 15 years old he became ticket agent and a year later telegraph operator for the Chicago & Northwestern railroad. Successfully he was chief operator, assistant train dispatcher, assistant trainmaster and trainmaster. When the superintendent of the road was ill he took charge.

Colonel Shaughnessy joined the Thirtieth engineers as first lieutenant, when the war broke out. He studied French until he spoke it fluently, and worked up a book of rules adapting American methods to French practice. He was promoted fast. Praise came to him from Brig. Gen. George Van Horn Moseley, assistant chief of staff, for his work as superintendent of the transportation corps in the Chateau-Thierry region, and as general superintendent at Is-sur-Tille during the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne offensives, and as general manager in the zone of advance.

General Pershing gave him the Distinguished Service medal "for exceptionally meritorious and distinguished services."

MADE LEGION DRIVE SUCCESS

Dare Devil Louisiana Man Put Real Thrills Into Campaign for New Members.

When Anthony Kelley was discharged from the navy in New Orleans, La., he found the life of a land-lubber terribly devoid of thrill and peril. He had been going to sea since the age of fifteen and he missed the excitement of stormy nights in the dizzy heights of the crow's nest and hair-raising trips on the ropes far above the deck.

With the start of a membership campaign of Rollin post of the American Legion in New Orleans, Kelley blossomed out as a professional dare-devil to assist his fellow Legionnaires in attracting attention. He climbed a flag pole atop the city hall, several hundred feet above the pavement and rocked back and forth trying to break the pole. A net stretched below was all that was between the daring Legionnaire and some exceedingly hard terrain.

Kelley was unable to break the flag pole, however. So he scaled an eight-story building and hung from the coping by his toes. Film companies rushed camera men to take motion pictures of the feat and the Legion membership drive was a success.

"None of it was as thrilling as the four years and four months I was in the war zone," Kelley declares. He was plying between American and European ports when war was declared. He entered the navy as an ensign and was discharged in April, 1919. He continued in service as an officer of the Merchant Marine until December, 1920.

Do Not Have to Pay Poll Tax.

Backed by the American Legion, a law providing for the registration of all ex-service men of all wars in the state of Montana was passed by the legislature. The new act exempts all ex-service men from payment of the poll tax and requires each county assessor to keep a record of the names and organizations of all veterans within his county. It is expected that either states will take similar action soon.

The Moving Picture Holdup

By MURIEL BLAIR.

(© 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)
The journey across the desert is not a distracting one, and any diversion is gladly welcomed, so that, when the flashily dressed man stood up at the end of the Pullman and began to address the passengers, everybody went forward and gathered around him, laughing and clapping. They thought he was going to offer something for sale.

"Ladies and gentlemen," began the flashily dressed man, "I am going to repeat to you what I have just said to the passengers in the next coach. When we reach Bad Water, in ten minutes or so, a moving picture man will be upon the platform to take some pictures representing a hold-up. I ask of you, fellow-passengers, to feign alarm, and if one or two of the ladies will pretend to faint it will help things along."

Everybody began laughing and eagerly awaited the stop at Bad Water. This was the fourth day of the transcontinental journey, and the passengers were on very good terms with one another. They began to discuss train robberies.

"I'll never give up a cent," exclaimed a stout, portly passenger, wiping the sweat from his forehead. "Well, as for me, I know I should just faint," answered a demure young lady. "And before I fainted I'd just hand over everything I had."

"Not with me around, you wouldn't," said the stout passenger, looking at her.

The other travelers did not commit themselves, for at that moment the train began to slow down and there appeared the irrigation ditch from which the station took its name. Then the little tin-roofed shack came into view, and a moment later a half dozen men, wearing sombreros and masked, with pistols stuck all around their waists, leaped forward across the tracks. One jumped into the engine cab and held his pistol to the forehead of the engineer. The man in the next coach, while two men made their way into the foremost of the coaches.

Upon the platform a moving picture operator had set up his instrument, and was busily reeling off the film, the passengers, interested in the scene, gathered around him.

"Now, ladies; now, gentlemen," interposed the flashily dressed man in tones of remonstrance, "won't you please go back into the coaches and be robbed? You're interfering with the operator. It spoils the reality of the pictures, your standing around here as though nothing had happened. People will think the picture's a fake, and it's going to be exhibited in all the leading cities of America. Won't you go back?"

Two or three did turn back toward the coaches in a half-hearted way, but the rest remained obdurate. A pistol shot rang out, followed by a woman's scream for help.

"You told me it was fun," shrieked a woman's voice. "I won't give you my rings. I won't, I tell you. There, take them, then. And that's every penny I have in the world."

"It's big like and his gang," somebody screamed. "It's real enough! My God, it's all real!"

Then the flashily dressed man came dashing out of his coach, a smoking pistol in his hand. He was followed by two of the gang.

"Hands up, you silly sheep," he yelled. "Hands up at I say. Now, then, back into the cars. One at a time, please. You'll keep them above your heads while I go through you."

Sheep, he had called them, and like sheep they obeyed. The first to do so was the commercial traveler. There was a look of terror on his red face, and he held his arms erect as ramrod.

Only one traveler remained upon the platform. It was the demure young lady who had been discussing her course of action in the event of a real hold-up. Instead of fainting she stamped her foot violently and actually shook her fist in the flashily dressed man's face.

"I won't put my hands up and I won't give you a cent. And I've got ninety dollars inside my waist and I defy you to take it, you coward. There!"

Upon the platform the operator was still grinding off his film. The flashily dressed man approached the young lady, took off his hat, and made her a bow.

"Madam, you are the only man among the lot," he said. "Pray keep your money as a tribute to your courage!"

The passengers had all filed in when the wheels of the train began to move. The flashily dressed man stood on the step and leered at them.

"Hurry to frighten you all, ladies and gentlemen," he said. "If you'd obliged me as I asked of you to do, I wouldn't have had to scare you. We ain't, bandits; we're just moving picture people; but we had to get the picture and as you wouldn't help us—why, we just had to help ourselves. Good-bye!"

When they had resumed their places there was quite a long silence. Then the drummer spoke.

"I know it wasn't real," he said. "If I thought it was I'd have acted different."

He smiled at the demure young lady, but she was reading a textbook on the Montessori method of teaching the young, and she never looked up at him between Bad Water and San Francisco.

INJUSTICE

By George Wilson Jennings

The greatest of all injustice is that which goes under the name of law and of all sorts of tyranny the forcing of the letter of the law against the equity is the most insupportable, and it has been always observed that those people who ever commit an injustice are at all times made more wretched than he who suffers it.

One of the bitterest things in life is to feel that one is the victim of injustice and there are few people who do not sometimes indulge in the delusion that they are victims of some persecution. This constant complaint of injustice might make one think that the love of justice must be very widespread. But experience points out the fact that there is really very little understanding of what real justice is and very little desire for it in the world at large. Perhaps there is a lurking suspicion of the truth hinted at in the adage: "If every one got his deserts who should escape a whipping!"

The real laws of nature and of life are so constituted and man has always an opportunity, if he could but understand it, to make good the worst kind of a mistake. Nature knows nothing of rewards and punishments; these are inventions of man; they are his substitutes for justice. Nature provides fresh opportunities and that is all a man needs when a man has ruined his life utterly and death comes to close one chapter of his life story. He does not die but takes a new lease on life, taking his inspiration from Nature which gives him a new life, and he can wipe out all of the recollections of his past life with the opportunity to mould his character afresh in a better pattern. Nature is infinitely merciful and so would man be if he knew himself and his real place in nature. He would always be trying to help his fellows and would not want to punish anyone, so he would not find any need for mercy for all of his aims would be just and merciful at the same time. A man must learn the lesson of life for himself; no one can do it for him. When he awakes to that fact he will perhaps cease his complaints of the injustice of the world, knowing that he too has in past life helped to make it what it is today.

Life is a great school, but it is only a prison to a man who thinks he is the victim of injustice because he has been hurt perhaps by "man's inhumanity to man", not realizing that he had his share in that too, and not understanding that his troubles are his opportunities.
